The purpose of this book is threefold: (1) review, and I realized that the script had to present a short but comprehensive survey spontaneously taken on the size and format of the localization of a number of transmitters of a book. I wrote a letter to Mr. B. Lewerich, of Springer-Verlag, advising him that terms and other neuroactive principles in the mammalian central nervous system, (2) to there would be some delay in the production provide some comments on the relation between the third edition of The Human Central Nervous System, that I happened to have written between "classical" neuroanatomy and "chemical" neuroanatomy, and (3) to suggest that I created an entirely different book on a brand by a synthesis of these two approaches of knowledge usually referred to as 'chemical neuroanatomy', and that I should like to publish this work, as previous ones, with the origin of this volume is Springer. Mr. Lewerich's reply was quite characteristic: 'I must admit that, in spite of a previous book, namely Nieuwenhuys, of seven years of cooperation, you still succeed in surprising me; I had not the slightest idea about your plans so far.
